EIS Manifesto Report by Joint Secretary (Teachers' Side)

The EIS has no party political links and would never endorse one party over another; we are not neutral, however, in recognising the importance of education to pupils, parents and local communities. The EIS believes in standing up for education in Scotland and, ahead of May's Scottish Council elections, has published a manifesto which outlines EIS policy in key areas including Early Years education, teacher recruitment, additional support needs, teacher workload and the impact of poverty and tackling inequality. The EIS is calling for all political parties and their candidates to commit to actions locally which will support teachers and aid education recovery.
